ENVIROHUM

CALL FOR CONTRIBUTIONS

EnviroHum is a fully interdisciplinary project which seeks to explore our complex and ever-changing relationship with the environment. Engaging practitioners of the Environmental Humanities and beyond, EnviroHum focuses on drawing out discourses of crisis and creation in relation to all forms of environmental culture. EnviroHum is a collaborative project drawing together environmental Artists, Academics and Activists, who are all interested in the role of ecology and the environment in their creative practice, politics and research. Through our opensource platform, we aim to foster new connections between disciplines, from Archaeology and Architecture to Literature and Engineering, teasing strands of communication and weaving a new meshwork of conversation under the banner of the Environmental Humanities.

WHAT DO WE WANT?

The editors of EnviroHum have an open call for contributions from the creative, to the critical, and anything else in-between. EnviroHum will consist of monthly blog posts and a specially-themed quarterly E-Zine.

We're looking for work that stands out from the crowd: work that is original, illuminating, witty, wise, and continually challenging. If you think you fit all these and more, we want to hear from you.

REGULAR FEATURES:

EnviroHum seeks contributions to our regular feature pages, but will also consider general contributions and special issues.

- ❖ New Writing: This is our long-form style section. From accessible academic papers, to journalistic response, or general eco-blogs, the New Writing page features pieces (1-3k in length) on anything from environmental crisis to reflections and book reviews.
- ❖ Eco-Art: The dedicated page for all forms of eco-art, from photo essays and films to ecopoetry and short stories (creative writing submissions 1-3k in length). If you're creating we want to know!
- ❖ Field Notes: The space for place-based practice and research, this feature seeks reflective essays, conference reports, and journal entries which follow specific projects or pieces of work (submissions 500-1.5k).

Please send these by email to EnviroHum@gmail.com with the relevant feature in the Subject Title. Submission Deadlines for the first issue: Monday 11th January 2016